First of all, I would like to apologize for not updating you about my schooling. I would also like to thank you because you still opted to grant me the scholarship despite the fact that I haven't reported for a year. Honestly, I was really stressed because I had to maintain my grades that both my scholarship and my college require. But fortunately, I'm on my third year right now and renewing my scholarship as well.

Accountancy can be pretty boring. Unlike other colleges, we don't get to tour outside and observe how things are to be done. We merely rely on our professors to take us to another world. But even though accountancy students are often called "dead kids" or "nerds", nothing beats the feeling of finally getting the right answers from problems which seemed impossible to solve. Frankly, I didn't like my course at first but now I enjoy it. This semester has taught me that to pass my course is to love it and loving accounting means including it to my system. After our accounting, our last subject, I with my friends would go out on the field to unwind. It's funny how we want to free our minds from the bloody subject but we would always end up chatting about the topics that were discussed earlier. When there is an upcoming quiz, we would study on places that are not intended for students to review. I, myself, had experienced taking out my thick accounting book and my calculator from my bag while riding the LRT. At first I was really hesitant because people might think that I just showoff. But when I opened my book, I was so occupied by what I'm studying that is why I forgot that I was concern about how I look in front of others.

But of course, Accounting is not the only subject I have. That is why I have to balance my time so that I won't cram on other subjects. My NSTP course requires us to continually go to Nueva Ecija to guide and help the residents to improve their ways of living. We taught them proper garbage segregation upon knowing that their only way of waste disposal is to burn their trash. We also taught them how to generate income by candle and soap making. We taught kids how to play badminton as well. Below is the picture of the said activity.

All in all my 2nd semester as a 2nd year student was great. I learned new experiences. I believe I gained maturity because of the lessons I've learned. But I know that it doesn't stop here. There is more to come and I'm really looking forward for additional knowledge and new experiences on my 3rd year. Hopefully, I'll still make the grade to avail the scholarship again.
